Burlington County Launches Program to Recycle Plastic Drink Carriers

Burlington County has a new eco-friendly way for residents to recycle plastic, snap-on beer, soda and seltzer can carriers, also known as "handles."

Though the handles are recyclable, they cannot be sorted by traditional recycling equipment and require special drop-offs.

This fall the County launched a program with Oregon-based plastic handle manufacturer PakTech, and two local breweries to provide drop-off locations for the used plastic handles.

Residents may recycle PakTech handles at the Burlington County Resource Recovery Complex located at 22000 Burlington-Columbus Road in Florence or bring them to Farm Truck Brewing in Medford or Zed's Beer in Evesham. Both breweries use PakTech handles and participate in the company's recycling program.

Lori White, co-founder of Zeds, shows Commissioner Tom Pullion PakTech handles recycled at Zeds and Farm Truck breweries.

"Burlington County residents are environmentally conscious and have helped us earn one of the best recycling records in the state," said Burlington County Commissioner Director Felicia Hopson. "Recycling PakTech plastic handles is a small but meaningful way to keep common plastic items out of our landfill. It helps protect our environment and promotes sustainability."

PakTech handles are made from 100% recycled plastics and are widely used by breweries and major brands like Kirkland, Kraft/Heinz, Pepsi, and Ocean Spray. The handles are replacing the older plastic ring holders that pose a threat to wildlife if littered.

Handles collected at these special drop-offs will be baled by the County and shipped to recycling processors who will sell them to companies, like PakTech, to make new handles, plastic lumber, and outdoor furniture.

Commissioner Tom Pullion, liaison to the Department of Solid Waste and Recycling, is encouraging more breweries to join the program. He noted that the County will also be collecting the handles at its fall paper shredding days and special events in the future.

"The more recycling options we can offer, the easier it will be for residents to participate and recycle right," Pullion said.
